An outline

A large number of rare and valuable manuscripts written on Sanchi tree bark are still lying scattered and unidentified in the Tai villages and Buddhist Monasteries of upper Assam, Arunachal Pradesh, which urgently need conservation. If these are not properly conserved through scientific devices, all the valuable rare materials will be extinct for ever and many of them have already lost. Only a handful of persons have got the knowledge of reading and writing of the Languages of the Manuscript. After the demise of these persons, it will be difficult to translate the manuscript for the knowledge of the commoners. It may be noted that the International Community also expresses its concern about the classical languages of Northeast India. In 2006, the Educational and Social Council of UNO declared two languages of Northeast India i.e. Edu- Misimi and Tai Khamyang as 'endangered' language which may be extinct for ever if no appropriate measure is taken for their conservation. Recently the UNESCO has also declared Tai Ahom language not only as 'endangered' but also as 'extinct' language. In view of this, it has become very important to take every possible measures to protect the language and the Manuscripts.

It may be mentioned that thousands of manuscripts are available with those section of the people who neither can afford to take care of them nor aware of the importance of the rare documents which not only bears the testimony of the long six hundred years rule of the Ahom but also rich cultural heritage of Assam. It is necessary to conserve the hidden knowledge contained in the unidentified manuscript for future generation to come. These old and rare Manuscripts are of different types and its literature is linked with history (social, political, religious, cultural, ethical and economical etc.) religion and secular literature, hymn and Mantra, Astrological and Lexicographical literatures etc. Thus Documentation, Publication, Preservation and conservation of the manuscripts on Tai society, religion, culture, art, archaeology, literature, polity and economy would greatly contribute towards the larger human civilization and enrich the world of knowledge. These 400-500 years old very rare Manuscripts are neither conserved nor deciphered and documented, translated and published. We propose to make an effort to unfold this treasure house of learning and knowledge. It would be a valuable source of empirical research. A number of Foreign Scholars from German, Australia, China, Myanmar, Laos and Thailand come to this part of Northeast India every year in search of these materials. Of late it has come to our notice that some of the owners of Manuscripts unfortunately sale them to the Foreign Scholars due to lack of knowledge of conservation and their importance. More importantly, some manuscripts are either burnt or buried along with the dead body of a person who possessed those rare documents.

The Institute of Tai Studies and Research has already possessed a good number of Manuscripts which are not yet conserved. Besides, after undertaking the work of survey of Manuscripts, under MRC programme, it has come to our knowledge that a large number of rare and valuable Manuscripts need urgent treatment to protect them from extinction. It will be a crime on our part if we do not take appropriate measures to conserve those "endangered" Manuscripts before these are lost forever.
